PRINCIPLES OF GOVERNMENT;

IN A

DIALOGUE

BETWEEN

A SCHOLAR AND A PEASANT.

WRITTEN BY

SIR WILLIAM JONES,

A Member of the SOCIETY FOR CONSTITUTIONAL INFORMATION.

ADVERTISEMENT.

A SHORT defence hath been thought necessiary against a violent and groundless attack upon the Flintshire Committee, for having testified their approbation of the following Dialogue, which hath been publicly branded with the most injurious estatets; and it is conceived, that the sure way to vindicate this little tract from so unjust a character, will be as publicly to produce u.—The friends of the Revolution will instantly see, that it contains no principle which has not the suffert of the highest authority, as well as the clearest reason.

If the doctrines, which it flightly touches in a manner suited to the nature of the Dialogue, be "feditious, treasonable, and "aiabolical," Lord Somers was an incendiary, Locke a traiter, and the Convention-Parliament a Pandæmonium; but if those names are the glory and boost of England; and if that Convention secured our liberty and happiness, then the doctrines in question are not only just and rational, but constitutional and salutary; and the repreachful epithets belong wholly to the system tem of those, who so grossly misafplied them.

IN A

DIALOGUE between a Scholar and a Peafant.

P. W. HY should humble men, like me, sign or set marks to petitions of this nature? It is better for us peafants to mind our husbandry, and leave what we cannot comprehend to the King and Parliament.

S. You can comprehend more than you imagine; and, as a free member of a free state, have higher things to mind than you may conceive.

P. If by free you mean out of prison, I hope to continue to, as long as I can pay my rent to the 'squire's bailiff; but what is meaned by a free state?

S. Tell me first what is meaned by a club in a village, of which I know you to be a member.

P. It is an affembly of men, who meet after work every Saturday to be merry and happy for a few hours in the week.

S. Have you no other object but mirth?

P. Yes; we have a box, into which we contribute equally from our monthly or weekly favings, and out of which any members of the club are to be relieved in fickness or poverty; for the parish officers are so cruel and insolent, that it were better to starve than apply to them for relief.

S. Did they, or the 'fquire, or the parson, or all together, compel you to form this fociety?

P. Oh! no—we could not be compelled; we formed it by our own choice.

S. You did right—But have you not fome head or prefident of your club?

P. The master for each night is chosen by all the company present the week before.

S. Does he make laws to bind you in case of ill temper or missehaviour?

P. He

P. He make laws! He bind us! No; we have all agreed to a fet of equal rules, which are figned by every new comer, and were written in a strange hand by young Spelman, the lawyer's clerk, whose uncle is a member.

S. What should you do, if any one member were to insist on becoming perpetual master, and on altering your rules at his arbitrary will and pleafure?

P. We should expel him.

S. What if he were to bring a ferjeant's guard, when the militia are quartered in your neighbourhood, and infift upon your obeying him?

P. We should resist, if we could; if not, the Society would be broken up.

S. Suppose that, with his ferjeant's guard, he were to take the money out of the box or out of your pockets?

P. Would not that be a robbery?

- S. I am feeking information from you. How should you act on such an occasion?
- P. We should submit, perhaps, at the time; but should afterwards try to apprhend the robbers.

S. What if you could not apprehend them?

P. We might kill them, I should think; and, if the King would not pardon us, God would.

- S. How could you either apprehend them, or, if they refifted, kill them, without a fufficient force in your own hands?
- P. Oh! we are all good players at fingle stick, and each of us has a stout cudgel or quarter-staff in the corner of his room.

S. Suppose, that a few of the club were to domineer over the rest, and insist upon making laws for them-

P. We must take the same course; except that it would be easier to restrain one man, than a number: but we should be the majority with justice on our side.

S. A word or two on another head. Some of you, I prefume, are no great accountants.

P. Few of us undeftand accounts; but we trust old Lilly the school-master, whom we believe to be an honest man; and he keeps the key of our box.

S. If your money should in time amount to a large sum, it might not perhaps be safe, to keep it at his house, or in any private house.

P. Where elfe fhould we keep it?

S. You might chuse to put it into the funds, or to lend it the 'fquire, who has lost so much lately at Newmarket, taking his bond or some of his fields as your security for the paywith interest.

P. We must in that case confide in young Spelman, who will soon set up for himself; and, if a lawyer can be honest, will be an honest lawyer.

S. What power do you give to Lilly, or should you give to Spelman, in the case supposed?

P. No power. We fould give them both a due allowance for their trouble, and should expect a faithful account of all they had done for us.

S. Honest men may change their nature. What if both or either of them were to deceive you?

P. We should remove them, put our trust in better men, and try to repair our loss.

S. Did it never occur to you, that every state or nation was only a great club?

P. Nothing ever occurred to me on the subject; for I never thought about it.

S. Though you never thought before on the subject, yet you may be able to tell me, why you suppose men to have assembled, and to have formed nations, communities, or states, which all mean the same thing?

P. In order, I should imagine, to be as happy as they can,

while they live.

S. By happy do you mean merry only?

P. To be as merry as they can without hurting themfelves or their neighbours, but chiefly to fecure themselves from danger, and to relieve their wants.

S. Do you believe, that any King or Emperor compelled them fo to affociate?

P. How could one man compel a multitude? A King or an Emperor, I prefume is not born with an hundred hands.

S. When a prince of the blood shall in any country be so distinguished by nature, I shall then, and then only, conceive him to be a greater man than you. But might not an army, with a King or General at their head, have compelled them to assemble?

P. Yes; but the army must have been formed by their own choice. One man or a few can never govern many without their consent.

S. Suppose,

S. Suppose, however, that a multitude of men, affembled in a town or city, were to chuse a King or Governor, might they not give him power or authority?

P. To be fure; but they would never be fo mad, I hope,

as to give him a power of making their laws.

S. Who elfe should make them?

P. The whole nation or people.

S. What if they disagreed?

P. The opinion of the greater number, as in our village-clubs, must be taken and prevail.

S. What could be done, if the fociety were fo large, that all could not meet in the fame place?

P. A greater number must chuse a less.

S. Who should be the chusers?

P. All, who are not upon the parish. In our club, if a man asks relief of the overseer, he ceases to be one of us; because he must depend on the overseer.

S. Could not a few men, one in feven for instance, chuse the affembly of law-makers as well as a larger number?

P. As conveniently, perhaps; but I would not suffer any man to chuse another, who was to make laws, by which my money or my life might be taken from me.

S. Have you a freehold in any county of forty shillings a year?

P. I have nothing in the world but my cattle, implements of husbandry, and houshold goods, together with my farm, for which I pay a fixed rent to the 'fquire.

S. Have you a vote then in any city or borough?

P. I have no vote at all; but am able by my honest labour to support my wife and four children; and, whilft I act honestly, I may defy the laws.

S. Can you be ignorant, that the Parliament, to which members are fent by this county, and by the next markettown, have power to make new laws, by which you and your family may be stripped of your goods, thrown into prison, and even deprived of life?

P. A dreadful power! I never made inquiries, having business of my own, concerning the business of Parliament; but imagined, that the laws had been fixed for many hundred years.

S. The common laws, to which you refer, are equal, just, and humane; but the King and Parliament may alter them when they please.

P. The

P. The King ought therefore to be a good man, and the Parliament to confift of men equally good.

S. The King alone can do no harm; but who must judge the goodness of Parliament men?

P. All those whose property, freedom, and lives may be be affected by their laws.

Wet fix men in feven, who inhabit this kingdom, have, like you, no votes; and the petition, which I defired you to fign, has nothing for its object, but the refloration of you all to the right of chusing those law makers, by whom your money or your lives may be taken from you. Attend, while I read it distinctly.

P. Give me your pen-I never wrote my name, ill as it may be written, with greater eagerness.

S. I applaud you, and trust, that your example will be followed by millions. Another word before we part. Recollect your opinion about your club in the village, and tell what ought to be the consequence, if the King alone were to insist on making laws, or in altering them at his will and pleasure.

P. He too must be expelled.

S. Oh! but think of his standing army, and of the militia, which now are his in substance, though ours in form.

P. If he were to employ that force again the nation, they would and ought to refult him, or the state would cease to be a state.

S. What, if the great accountants and great lawyers, the Lillys and Spelmans, of the nation were to abuse their trust, and cruelly injure, instead of faithfully serving, the public?

P. We must request the King to remove them, and make trial of others; but none should implicitly be trusted.

S. But what if a few great lords, or wealthy men, were to keep the King himself in subjection, yet exert his force, lavish his treasure, and missues his name, so as to domineer over the people and manage the Parlament?

P. We must fight for the King and for our selves.

S. You talk of fighting, as it you were speaking of some rustick engagement at a wake; but your quarter-staffs would avail you little against bayonets.

P. We might easily provide ourselves with better arms.

S. Not so easily: when the moment of resistance came, you would be deprived of all arms; and those who should furnish you with them, or exhort you to take them up, would be called traitors, and probably put to death.

P. We

P. We ought always, therefore, to be ready; and keep each of us a firong firelock in the corner of his bed-room. S. That would be legal as well as rational. Are you, my honest friend, provided with a musket?

P. I will contribute no more to the club, and purchase a firelock with my favings.

S. It is not necessary-I have two, and will make you a prefent of one with complete account ments.

P. I accept it thankfully, and and conserve with the at your leifure on other fulljects of this kind.

S. In the mean while, spend an bour every morning for the next fortnight in learning to prime and load expeditiously, and to fire and charge with bayonet firmly and regularly. fay every morning; because, if you exercise too late in the evening, you may fall into some of the legal snares, which have been spread for you by those gentlemen, who would rather secure game for their table, than liberty for the nation.

P. Some of my neighbours, who have ferved in the militia, will readily teach me; and, perhaps, the whole village may be perfuaded to procure arms, and to learn their exer-cife.

S. It cannot be expected, that villagers should purchase arms, but they might easily be supplied, if the gentry of the nation would spare a little from their vices and luxury.

P. May they return to some sense of konour and virtue!

- S. Farewell, at prefent; and remember, "that a free " state is only a more numerous and more powerful club, " and that he only is a free man, who is member of fuch " a state."
- P. Good morning, Sir! You have made me wifer and better than I was yellerday; and yet, methinks, I had fome knowledge in my own mind of this great subject, and have been a politician all my life without perceiving it.
